

BULLS MAKE GAINS IN ALL THE MARKETS.

THE BULLS SUCCEEDED IN ADVANCING PRICES.

The News Was Generally Favorable and More Interest Was Taken in a Speculative Way.

While there were no sensational developments in the local grain situation yesterday, they were all better and the gains made during the day in some instances were encouragingly large. Added to the all-around improvement in prices there was the most speculative interest taken, and the speculations in the pit or change were on a larger and broader scale than they have been for several weeks, and did more to restore confidence among traders than the betterment in prices even. Speculation, as was to have been expected, ran mainly to the higher-priced cereals, the developments during the course of the day's business being of a character to increase the interest and stimulate operations. Near the close this grain gave quite a remarkable exhibition of strong support when compared with former movements. The building up of a practically round market started to furnish the tendency of prices toward a higher level. This condition of affairs was reflected in other grains, and the market was more active, deeper, and more through sympathy than anything else. The close all round showed gains for the day with most of the markets being at or near the top prices for the day.

There was a little slowing down of the speculative work in the afternoon, but it was only for a short time, the features of the situation after being the aggressive support, and the well-defined upward trend of the market indices were just the opposite and brought about a betterment in round encouraging speculative support and advancing prices.

As might have been expected, in any Liverpool cables that upset the calculations of those friendly to the grain market, the market was not in a position to do so, and leaving out its usual course they came in with a steady advance in response to one of the best days of the year. The feeling here was weak and there was no disposition shown to sell them to buy, although stocks of wheat, through shipments to outside mills. Another bad haul was the continued large receipts, the arrival at Liverpool of 1,000,000 bushels, bringing their total of 1,000,000 bushels, and 2,000,000 bushels for delivery.
